Abstract: The purpose of this study is to investigate how cluster-based strategies might improve national branding, particularly in the travel industry. It investigates the ways in which clusters, as cooperative networks of related businesses, might promote innovation, create unified brand identities, and enhance regional economic stability. Effectively implementing such initiatives to meet regional and national tourist objectives is noticeably lacking. With a focus on resource integration, innovation, and stakeholder collaboration, the study creates an algorithm for establishing tourism clusters through logical analysis and synthesis. By utilizing their combined capabilities, well-structured clusters considerably improve competitiveness and regional economic vitality, according to the results. In order to optimize cluster efficacy, our findings emphasize the significance of strategic government and private sector cooperation. They also provide policy frameworks and investment methods to support sustainable tourism-driven economic growth.

a cluster system in order to increase competitiveness in the regions. Harvard Business School professor Michael Porter, with a particular focus on the cluster system, put forward the idea that – “the competitiveness of a country should be considered not its individual firms, but clusters – the international competitiveness of associations of firms in different fields, and this will increase the ability of clusters to effectively use internal resources”.

A. Yu. “Clusters are an important factor in attracting buyers and increasing the competitiveness of the tourism industry, and the cooperation of firms and organizations organizing the recreation of tourists and their exit to travel around the country in the economic tourist distention forms the main basis of the tourist cluster”.

For the formation of the cluster as a vital, active, effective structure, professor M. P. Voynareko believes that five conditions must be met:

- 2) innovations - the organization, management, financing of production and the use of new technologies capable of creating new opportunities in a competitive environment;
- 3) information - the creation of open and free websites and information resources that ensure the priority in providing and selling products to the market, attracting competent labor forces;
- 4) integration - Organization of cooperation of firms in the sphere and area using technologies in the support of public bodies science;
- 5) interest is the main condition for the activities of entrepreneurs or public structures, ensuring the actions of cluster participants on the path to profit.

2. Methodology

Logical thinking, analysis and synthesis, induction and deduction methods are widely used in solving the tasks of marketing management and tourism development through the cluster instrument.

3. Analysis and Results

The algorithm for the formation of the proposed tourism cluster, which can be used by state and Municipal Employees, the scientific community, entrepreneurs engaged in the research and development of tourism in the process of developing tourist clusters. The main task is to establish the basis for the development of the most optimal areas for the development of the tourism cluster, which consists in diagnosing the level and potential of God in terms of tourism activities. Relying on the above points, the leading positions are occupied by large tour operator firms that export their services outside the country when creating tourist clusters.

Therefore, it is associated with the presence and creation of social, economic measures in certain manifestations of the formation of a cluster complex and the establishment of its activities. An existing condition for the introduction of a tourist cluster in our country- in the result of the study of the conditions, an algorithm for introducing a tourist cluster was developed (Figure 1).

4. Conclusion

In conclusion, when creating a promising plan of the complex development strategy of the tourist cluster in our country, it is necessary to pay special attention to the characteristics, requirements of each tourist area and determine the priority areas of financing.
